

FRANCIS SCOTT KEY'S ALMA MATER.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., June 20.--Bishop Andrews of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preached here to-night the baccalaureate sermon at St. John's College, the Alma Mater of Francis Scott Key, Reverdy Johnson, and Lockwood, the Arctic explorer. The orator's text was the "Parable of the Talents." He told the graduates that God gave every man a diversity of talent. To some he gave great talents, and to others little. Each, however, was to be judged by the talent given him. The man with little could not be expected either in a worldly or spiritual sense to accomplish as much as the man gifted with great talents. The man of great talent should not be proud, for his talents were the free gift of God and not of his own making, and the man of little talent should not be envious, for a similar reason.

The New York Times

Published: June 21, 1886

Copyright © The New York Times