

THE REV. L. W. BACON QUESTIONED.

From the Charleston News, Nov. 10.

Thomas H. Harden, one of the oldest and most prominent citizens of Savannah, and the father of Judge Harden, of the City Court, has published the following queries, addressed to the Rev. Dr. Leonard Woolsey Bacon, Pastor of the Independent Presbyterian Church:

"It is stated on reliable authority that you have said to some of the citizens of Savannah, first, that you favor mixed schools, black and white, in Savannah; second, that you would not object to your daughter walking in the street leaning on the arm of a negro man; third, that you would not object to the marriage of your daughter to a negro man if she were willing to marry him. Will you please answer through the public press and say whether any or all these reports represent you correctly or are slanders?"

The queries have created a great sensation. Dr. Bacon is advising with his friends as to what course to pursue.

The New York Times

Published: November 13, 1887

Copyright © The New York Times