

THE JACKSONS RECONCILED.

Attorney General's Wife Has Abandoned Divorce Suit She Planned.

Special to The New York Times.

BUFFALO, Feb. 7.—A reconciliation has been brought about between Attorney General William S. Jackson and his wife. She announced on Monday that she intended to begin an action for divorce, based upon evidence which she had found in Rochester. The Attorney General arrived at his home last night. He would make no statement, but late this afternoon Mrs. Jackson issued a formal announcement that a reconciliation had taken place.

James L. Quackenbush, a lawyer, of New York, was the peacemaker. He arrived in this city on Monday, and said that he was here with his wife to attend a ball. It was learned, however, that he did not leave the Iroquois Hotel until last night. He is a close personal friend of both Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, and had manifested a friendly interest in their affairs before, besides having been instrumental in the appointment of Mr. Jackson as Second Assistant District Attorney under District Attorney Edward E. Coatsworth.

Mrs. Jackson's statement is as follows:

"There are no differences between my husband and myself. There will be no proceedings of any nature. I shall discuss this subject no further."

Mr. and Mrs. Jackson have gone to Albany together.

The New York Times

Published: February 8, 1907

Copyright © The New York Times