

BISHOP GALLOWAY DEAD.

Was Most Eminent Divine of Methodist Episcopal Church South.

JACKSON, Miss., May 12.—Bishop Charles B. Galloway of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Mississippi, distinguished divine and publicist, who for the last twenty years had held high rank among the pulpit orators of America, died at his residence in this city to-day after an illness of several days with a mild form of pneumonia, complicated with heart trouble.

The Bishop was taken ill last Friday on his way from Nashville, where he had attended the annual session of the College of Bishops. No alarm over his condition was felt until Monday night, when pneumonia developed in one lung. The patient grew worse rapidly. During the final twelve hours he was unconscious.

The funeral will take place Thursday afternoon from the First Methodist Church, followed by interment at Greenwood Cemetery. Bishop Warren A. Candler of Georgia will conduct the services.

Orders have been issued for all departments of the Federal, State, County, and Municipal Governments to remain closed to-morrow, and Mayor Crowder has issued a proclamation urging all the business houses to close for the day.

Charles B. Galloway was born at Kosciusko, Miss., on Sept. 1, 1849. He was graduated from the University of Mississippi in 1868, and the degree of Doctor of Laws was later conferred upon him by the Northwestern University and by Tulane. He entered the university in 1868.

Bishop Galloway's writings covered a wider range perhaps than those of any other person connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church in the South. For a number of years he took an active interest in the prohibition campaigns in Mississippi and other Southern States.

He was President of the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, President of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College and of Vanderbilt University, and was a member of the Board of Trustees of the John F. Slater Fund.

The New York Times

Published: May 13, 1909

Copyright © The New York Times